

Upper St. Clair Writer's Manual
Summer 2003

IMPORTANT

Each student in Upper St. Clair High School will receive one free copy of the Upper St. Clair High School Research Paper Packet or one free copy of The Writer's Manual. Information related to the research process will be used in all courses which require research. It is the student's responsibility to keep this handbook throughout his or her high school years. There is a fee for a replacement copy.

INTRODUCTION

Upper St. Clair High School is committed to helping students become effective writers. Across the curriculum, teachers encourage students to express themselves through the written word. Although inspiration, creativity, and personal style affect writing in profound ways, effective writing also requires thoughtful deliberation and knowledge: knowledge of the writing process, effective organizational patterns, various modes of writing, standard conventions related to grammar and usage, and reliable methods of evaluation. Students need to learn that which brings substance and clarity to writing. Students and teachers need to speak a common language as they discuss the dynamic process known as writing.

This manual introduces, reviews, and clarifies aspects of effective writing to help Upper St. Clair students improve and enhance their ability to express themselves in their writing. The following pages present information taken in part from the following books which students may want to consult for additional information:

Gibaldi, Joseph. MLA Handbook for Writers of Research Papers. 5th ed. New York: Modern Language Association of America, 1999.

Hacker, Diana. A Pocket Style Manual. 3rd edition. New York: Bedford, 2000.

---. A Writer's Reference. 4th edition. New York: Bedford, 1999.

Holman, C. Hugh and Harmon, William. A Handbook of Literature. 6th ed. New York: Macmillan, 1992.

Sebranek, Patrick, Dave Kemper, and Verne Meyer. Writers INC. A Student Handbook for WRITING and LEARNING. Wilmington: Houghton Mifflin, 2001.

THE WRITING PROCESS

PREWRITING--Choosing a subject and gathering ideas

1. Search for a meaningful writing idea--one that interests you and meets the requirements of the assignment.
2. Use a selecting strategy (listing, clustering, freewriting, and so on) to identify possible subjects.
3. Learn as much as you can about the subject you choose.
4. Decide on an interesting or important part of the subject (your focus) to develop. Express your focus in a thesis statement.
5. Think about an overall plan or design for organizing your writing. This plan can be anything from a brief list to a detailed outline.

WRITING THE FIRST DRAFT-- Connecting your ideas

1. Write the first draft while your prewriting is still fresh in your mind.
2. Set the right tone by giving your opening paragraph special attention.
3. Refer to your plan of organization, but be flexible. A more interesting route may unfold as you write.
4. Don't worry about getting everything perfect at this point; concentrate on developing your ideas. (If you're working on a computer, save a copy of each draft.)

REVISING--Improving your writing

1. Review your first draft, checking the ideas, organization, and voice of your writing.
2. Ask an objective reader to react to your work.
3. Add, cut, reword, or rearrange ideas as necessary.
4. Carefully assess the effectiveness of your introduction and conclusion.
5. Look for special opportunities to make your writing as meaningful and interesting as possible.

EDITING--Checking for style and accuracy

1. Edit your revised draft for sentence smoothness and word choice.
2. Check for errors in usage, punctuation, capitalization, spelling, and grammar.
3. Consult a dictionary, a thesaurus, and a grammar handbook as needed.
4. Ask a reliable reader to check your writing for errors you may have missed.
5. Prepare a neat final copy of your writing.
6. Proofread the final draft for errors before submitting it.

PUBLISHING--Sharing your work

1. Share the finished product with your teacher, writing peers, friends, and family members.
2. Decide if you are going to include the writing in your portfolio.
3. Consider submitting your work to a school, local, or national publication. Be sure to follow the requirements for submitting manuscripts.

THE THESIS STATEMENT

focus/controlling idea/central premise

One of the most challenging yet essential tasks in essay composition is formulating a thesis statement. When a writer successfully crafts the thesis, he prepares an assertion/assumption/inference and evidence to support this claim. A thesis statement

- appropriately addresses the audience and purpose
- identifies the focus of your essay
- sets the tone of your essay
- can be supported with details, reasons, evidence
- controls what information stays in or goes out of your essay
- conveys what you will explain, analyze, prove, etc.
- tells the reader what to expect in your essay

The Formula:

A SPECIFIC SUBJECT
+ ATTITUDE (CONDITION, POSITION)

---

= EFFECTIVE THESIS

Topic: Air Pollution in America

Possible Thesis Statements:

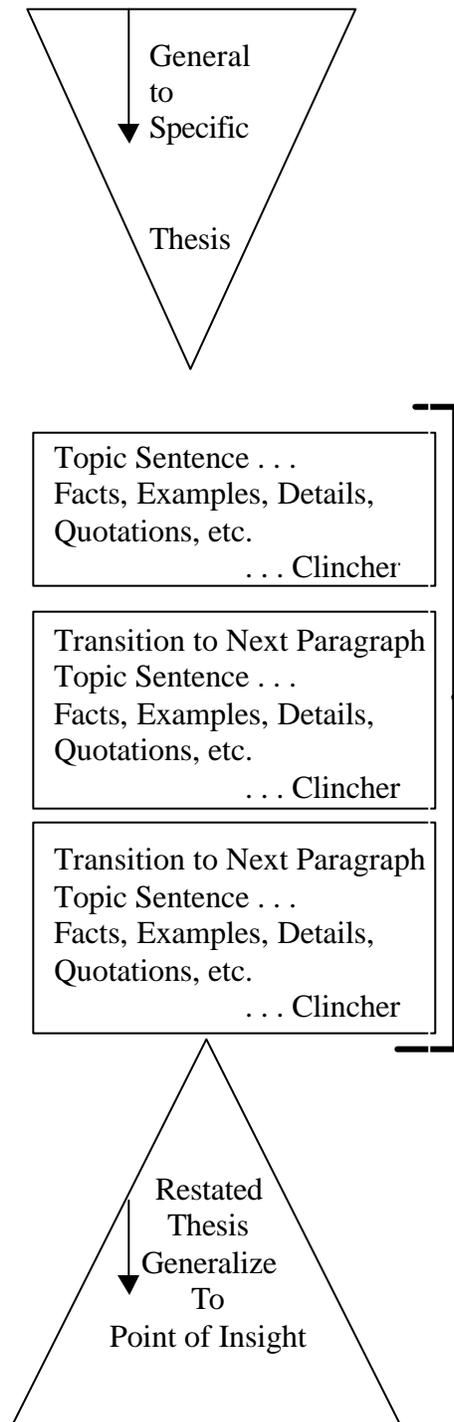

- Air pollution has had a dramatic effect on Americans.
- Air pollution has been the primary cause of numerous health-related problems for Americans.
- Public concern over the long-range effects of air pollution has forced several major industrial reforms.

ORGANIZATIONAL PATTERNS

Once you have considered your thesis and supporting material, it is time to think about how you will organize your paper. Different patterns work best for different subjects. Below you will find the most common patterns. You may also find that these organizational terms define various types of essays you may be assigned to write.

- Cause and Effect: In this pattern the writer considers an event and factors or events leading up to it, as well as any connections that have occurred. Often, the writer first provides a general statement of cause and then discusses the effects.
- Chronological: In this pattern the focus is on the time sequence of events. It is often used when the reader wishes to explain events or to summarize steps. It is most often used in the narrative mode of writing.
- Comparison/Contrast: In this pattern one subject or viewpoint is compared or contrasted with another. The writer's purpose, then, is to convey either the subjects' similarities or differences. This examination may be accomplished through a sub-organizational pattern of point by point (where the writer addresses each element of both subjects) or block format (where the writer devotes the first section to one point of view and the second section to the other).
- Deductive: In this pattern the writer first states a general idea and follows with specific reasons, examples, or facts.
- Definition: In this pattern, which is also called classification, the writer explains a term, an idea, a procedure, etc. Define your topic by the class to which it belongs. Then discuss differences or similarities with others in that class. This organization is used most often in an informational mode.
- Importance: In this pattern the most effective approach is to discuss the least important detail first and progress to the most important; however, the inverse may be used in journalistic writing.
- Inductive: In this pattern the writer presents specific details which lead to a general statement or conclusion.
- Problem/Solution: In this pattern the writer states a problem and then presents one or more solutions.
- Spatial: In this pattern, which is also called the order of location, the writer describes details based on location in space. In general, the movement is consistent, following a planned format, for example top to bottom, left to right, etc. It is often utilized in descriptive and narrative writing.

FORMAT OF A MULTI-PARAGRAPH ESSAY

Introduction

- Catch the reader's attention by presenting a relevant example, statistic, opinion, story, quotation, definition, etc.
- Give the reader any important background information necessary for his/her understanding of the thesis.
- Narrow your topic to your specific thesis statement which should prepare the reader for the focus of the body of the paper.

Body Paragraphs

- Present evidence to support the thesis.
- Organize and arrange the paragraphs in a meaningful order.
- Use transitional words and phrases to move the reader from one idea to the next.
- Begin a new paragraph when there is a shift in thought or topic.
- Determine the appropriate number of paragraphs in the body depending on thesis complexity, quantity of support available, and subtopics into which the main point is delineated.

Conclusion

- Begin by reinforcing on your thesis, but state it in different words.
- In longer papers, you may summarize the main points presented in the body.
- Present a final point of insight or idea of significance that evolves logically from the evidence presented in the essay.

WRITING IN VARIOUS MODES

The state of Pennsylvania has identified three modes (types) of writing to be among the most important in school and in life and, therefore, the most appropriate for the state assessment. The three modes are narrative writing, informational writing, and persuasive writing. Throughout each school year in various disciplines, students should practice writing in these three modes.

Reading Prompts for a Variety of Modes

When taking the state assessment, students should carefully examine the wording of prompts, whether in an essay or test format. Once the student determines the type of writing he or she is being asked to do, he/she can proceed with the writing process. Sometimes the differences are subtle. The examples below, taken from the PSSA Writing Assessment Handbook, were administered in a sixty-minute, structured setting. Although they deal with the same topic, the focus varies depending upon the wording of the prompt. Look carefully at the bold words which signal the mode of writing required by the prompt.

Narrative

Just as students influence teachers, teachers also influence students. Select one teacher who has made the greatest impact on you. Write about an experience that shows how your teacher affected you profoundly.

Informational

Just as students influence teachers, teachers also influence students. Select one teacher who has made the greatest impact on you. Write to explain how your teacher profoundly affected you.

Persuasive

Just as students influence teachers, teachers also influence students. A teacher who has made a great impact on you is a candidate for an award. Write to convince the selection committee that this teacher does or does not merit this award.

Narrative Writing

Narrative writing tells a story or relates an incident. Whether the subject stems from an actual or a fictitious experience, this type of writing depends upon development of setting, point of view, plot, and characters. When you see any of the following words or phrases in a prompt, you are being asked to compose a narrative essay: imagine, describe, write a story, tell about an experience.

Narrative writing can be classified as either personal narrative or imaginative narrative. Personal narratives are stories based upon a writer's own experiences or memories. Imaginative narratives require a writer to invent a story rather than relate a real experience.

Much of this type of writing is reflective and begins with a personal need to examine some aspect of the writer's world. This type of writing differs from informational and persuasive writing because it is more personal and more reflective.

Before writing:

- Choose a specific event, the relevant details, and the purpose or meaning you attach to that event.
- Determine the tone, point of view, and characters (if necessary).

During writing:

- Consider using a topic sentence which will establish your topic, your tone, and the point of view you have chosen.
- Determine your use of an organizational pattern. Chronological order is the most common and effective.
- Use details, including sensory words, and consider the use of dialogue, suspense, vivid language, and action to energize your narrative.

After writing:

- Review your essay to ensure that you have
  - focused on a specific event or experience, as well as a point or meaning you wish your reader to gain from your narrative.
  - conveyed your tale clearly.
  - formed an effective piece which flows smoothly
  - corrected conventions (spelling, grammar, and sentence structure).

Informational Writing

Informational writing shares knowledge and conveys messages, instructions, or ideas. The writer's purpose is to present, organize, or evaluate information. Informational writing follows the structure of thesis-plus-support. It is a common writing mode in academic, personal, and job-related areas.

When you see any of the following words in a prompt, you are being asked to compose an informational essay: inform, explain, illustrate, examine, discuss. Remember that in this type of writing you must remain objective. Informational writing differs from persuasive or narrative writing in that you are not putting forth an opinion or simply relating an event. Rather, you are presenting information clearly and thoroughly in support of your thesis.

Before writing:

- Define the topic, narrowing it to refine your focus.
- Think about what you already know about your topic. Depending upon the assignment, you may be able to complete the essay based upon your current knowledge or you may need to research additional information.
- Decide on a clear thesis statement which presents a significant aspect of your topic.

During writing:

- Formulate your supporting points and develop them by citing specific facts, examples, quotations, etc.
- Determine an appropriate organization for your essay. Order of importance is a common and effective structure. Other organizational patterns useful in informative writing are comparison/contrast, problem/solution, and cause/effect (see pages 4 - 5).

After writing:

- Review your essay to ensure that you have
  - focused on your thesis throughout the essay.
  - supported your thesis with sufficient proof.
  - remained objective in your treatment of your thesis
  - corrected conventions (spelling, grammar, and sentence structure).

Persuasive Writing

Persuasion is a common mode in editorials, advertisements, speeches, letters, articles, and reviews. Using facts and examples, the persuasive writer presents an informed opinion which motivates the reader to form an opinion or to take action. In addition to providing information, the persuasive writer tries to convince the reader to agree with the writer's opinion on a debatable issue.

When you see any of the following words in a prompt, you are being asked to compose a persuasive essay: convince, persuade, refute, defend, influence, argue, or debate. The thesis of a persuasive essay should be specific, timely, worthwhile, and arguable. The thesis you develop must also be one for which you can gather evidence of support, not simply a matter of personal opinion. Persuasive writing differs from informational writing in that the purpose is not to inform or explain, but to influence the reader's opinion on your topic through the presentation of evidence.

Before writing:

- Determine both sides of your argument and which position you will take. Think about what you wish your reader to think or do.
- Gather information about your topic.
- Identify your thesis which must present an arguable point.

During writing:

- Formulate your supporting points and present them using facts, reasons, statistics, incidents, and examples. (Don't forget to document where necessary!)
- Determine an appropriate organization of the essay. Order of importance is an effective structure.
- Remember that in more sophisticated essays, you may also present counterpoints in order to anticipate your readers' objections. However, this technique should be undertaken early in the paper so as to leave the reader with a strong impression of your argument.
- Conclude the essay with a clear call to action.

After writing:

- Review your essay to ensure that you have presented a consistent opinion throughout the essay.
  - supported your opinion with clear facts, examples, etc.
  - indicated to your reader the opinion or action you wish him or her to consider.
  - corrected conventions (spelling, grammar, and sentence structure).

INTRODUCTION TO THE RESEARCH PAPER

The MLA (Modern Language Association) Handbook for Writers of Research Papers describes a set of conventions governing the written presentation of research. Following the logical steps in research and writing will simplify and clarify the student writer's task. Upper St. Clair High School has adopted this MLA documenting format. Use the information and examples given here as reference tools as you prepare your research paper. The following introduction is based on the MLA Handbook.

The Research Paper

A research paper is, first and foremost, a form of written communication. Like other forms of nonfiction writing--letters, memos, reports, essays, articles, books--it should present information and ideas clearly and effectively.

Although the research paper has much in common with other forms of writing, it differs by relying on sources of information other than the writer's personal knowledge and experience. It is based on primary research, secondary research, or a combination of the two. Primary research involves the study of a subject through firsthand observation and investigation, such as conducting a survey or carrying out a laboratory experiment; secondary research entails the examination of studies that others have made of the subject. Many academic papers, as well as many reports and proposals required in business, government, and other professions, depend on secondary research.

Research will increase your knowledge and understanding of a subject and will lend authority to your ideas. The paper based on research is not a collection of other persons' thoughts and words; it is a carefully constructed presentation of ideas that relies on research sources for clarification and verification. While you must fully document the facts and opinions you draw from your research, the documentation should not do more than support your statements and provide concise information about the research cited; it should never overshadow the paper or distract the reader from the ideas you present. When students are asked to write research papers, however, they often become so preoccupied with gathering material, taking notes, compiling bibliographies, and documenting sources that they forget to apply the knowledge and skills they have acquired through previous writing experiences. This discussion, therefore, begins with a brief review of the steps often outlined for expository (informational) writing. Although few writers follow such formal steps, keeping them in mind can suggest ways to proceed as you write:

- Select a subject that interests you and that you can treat within the assigned limits of time and space.
- Determine your purpose in writing the paper. For example, do you want to describe something, explain something, argue for a certain point of view, or persuade your reader to think or do something?
- Consider the type of audience for whom you are writing. For example, is your reader a specialist or a non-specialist on the subject, someone likely to agree or disagree with you, someone likely to be interested or uninterested in the subject?

- Develop a thesis statement expressing the central idea of your paper.
- Gather your ideas and information in a preliminary list, eliminating anything that would weaken your paper.
- Consult secondary sources to ensure that the development of your thesis is thorough, thoughtful, and accurate.
- Arrange materials in an order appropriate to the aims of the paper and decide on the method or methods you will use in developing your ideas (e.g. definition, classification, analysis, comparison and contrast, example).
- Make a detailed outline to help you keep to your plan as you write.
- Write a preliminary draft, including a well-developed introduction, the body, and a conclusion.
- Read your preliminary draft critically and try to improve it, revising, rearranging, adding, and eliminating words, phrases, and sentences to make the writing more effective. Follow the same procedure with each subsequent draft.
- Proofread the final draft, correcting any errors in standard conventions.
- Prepare the final manuscript according to the MLA format and your teacher's specifications.
- As you prepare and write research papers, always remember that no set of conventions for preparing a manuscript can replace lively and intelligent writing and that no amount of research and documentation can compensate for a poor presentation.

SELECTING A TOPIC

All writing begins with a topic. If you have some freedom in choosing what to write about, consider a subject that interests you. You should visit the library to determine whether enough serious work has been done on the subject to permit adequate research and whether the pertinent source materials are readily available.

In selecting a topic, keep in mind the time allotted to you and the expected length of the research paper. “Twentieth-Century World Politics” would obviously be too broad a subject for a ten-page research paper. Students commonly begin with fairly general topics and then refine them, by research and thought, into more specific ones. Here again, preliminary reading will be helpful. Consult books and articles as well as some general reference works, such as encyclopedias, and try to narrow your topic by focusing on a particular aspect or a particular approach. A student initially interested in writing on Shakespeare’s imagery, for instance, might decide after some careful thought and reading to focus on the blood imagery in Macbeth; the topic “Modern Technology and Human Procreation” could likewise be narrowed to “The Failure of Surrogate Motherhood.”

Before beginning the project, make sure you understand the amount and depth of research required, the degree of subjectivity permitted, and the type of paper expected. Confer with your instructor if you need help in understanding the assignment or in choosing an appropriate topic.

COMPILING A WORKING BIBLIOGRAPHY

A working bibliography identifies sources of information--such as books, essays and articles from periodicals and electronic media--from which you might draw material for your paper. A working bibliography is compiled by searching for titles that sound promising as sources of information. Your preliminary reading may provide some of your first titles. The card catalog/ACCESS PA, POWER Library, and Gale Discovering Collection are credible sources for information on your topic. In addition, you may want to explore appropriate portable databases or the internet. Please consult your teacher concerning acceptable electronic references for your research.

The working bibliography will change as you add new sources which are often found in the bibliographies and notes of the books and articles you consult. The Works Cited page of your paper is your final bibliography; it lists the sources from the original working bibliography which you actually have used in your paper.

Index Cards

Use index cards to compile your working bibliography. Work with one standard card size (3x5 or 4x6). Listing potential sources of information on sheets of paper does not allow for the kind of flexibility provided by cards. Cards can be rearranged, reorganized, added or eliminated as often as you wish. Correct bibliography cards serve two important functions: they are an efficient tool for finding information, and they provide the necessary information needed to complete the Works Cited page. Remember to check the accuracy of your bibliography cards when you actually use a source. All of the required information for each bibliography must be completely cited or the source is invalid.

Bibliography Card Format

The correct format for your bibliography cards is illustrated in the section titled "Preparing the List of Works Cited--Sample Entries." Entries are not the same for books, essays, or articles. Students should add certain information to two or three corners of each bibliography card to facilitate its use:

1. Lower right-hand corner    The library and source where the work can be found (e.g. cc/USCTL, Gale/USCHS, EBSCO/USCHS, NET/USCHS)
2. Lower left-hand corner    Student name and teacher name
3. Upper right-hand corner    Call number if the source is a book.

TAKING NOTES

Finding Information in the Library

Use your preliminary bibliography cards to find information in the library. The location of the information depends on the type of source for which you are searching.

Books are located either in the stacks or in the reserve section in the back of the Upper St. Clair High School Library. Magazines and SIRS must be requested at the front desk. Before essays, which are found in Magill, can be requested, you need to see if they are in the library by checking the card catalog under the name of the editor of the book that contains the essay. Electronic sources may be accessed online through the computers at school or at your home.

Finding Information in the Book

To locate your specific topic, use the index or table of contents to find if the book contains any pertinent information. Then scan the pages rapidly until you find the information you need.

Evaluating the Information

You should not assume, of course, that something is truthful or trustworthy just because it is in print. Some material may be based on incorrect or outdated information, on poor logic, or on the author's own narrow opinions. Weigh what you read against your own knowledge and intelligence as well as other treatments on the subject.

Analyzing a Website

With the vast array of resources available on the internet, the researcher must be especially careful about evaluating the reliability of the information published. Consider each web site with a critical eye:

- URL --What type of site is it? What bias might the publisher have about the subject?

.com--a commercial site

.org--a group or organization

.gov--a government site

.edu--educational site

.pro--professionals

.museum--cultural institution

.mil--military site

.net--a network

.k12--school

.coop--cooperative organization

.ac--university site

.biz--company using the net for profit

- Author of the site--What are the writer's credentials? Is the web site affiliated with any institution? What is the expertise of the individual or group that created the site? Does the affiliation of the author or group appear to bias the information?
- Purpose--How objective is the information? Is the purpose clearly stated? Is the writer attempting to inform you, to convince you of a point of view, to sell you a product or service, to amuse or entertain you?

- Content--How much information is given? How in-depth is the information? Does the content appear to be fact or opinion? Does it contain primary source material? Does the writer provide evidence or examples to support the main points? Is it accurate? Is it current? How does the information compare with other sources?
- Presentation--Is the information clearly presented? Is it well organized? Are the spelling and grammar correct? Does the placement of ads detract from the seriousness of the information given?
- Recommendation--Have people whom you respect (teachers, librarians, or parents) recommended this site as a reliable source of information?

The Single-Note System

The single-note system is based on the need for flexibility in note taking. Because notes are never used in the order in which they are taken, they must be kept as flexible as possible. As you take notes, be sure that each card contains only one idea or point of information. Copy directly or paraphrase the critic's words carefully follow your teacher's requirements. Be sure to use quotation marks to indicate directly quoted material. Head the quotation with a one- or two-word heading, known as a slug, that indicates the specific topic of the quoted or summarized material. Then, write the last name of your source and page number in the appropriate way.

As you do your research, you may develop your own ideas and opinions. Note cards may also include your original ideas. To ensure that you do not forget your own thoughts or observations, write your idea on a note card and indicate yourself as the source.

In taking notes, try to be both concise and thorough. Above all, strive for accuracy, not only in copying words for direct quotations but also in summarizing and paraphrasing authors' ideas. Careful note taking will help you avoid the problem of plagiarism.

Choosing When to Give Credit

Sources should be documented to inform your readers of the origin of your information and to give credit to the writers of the original. You need to document when you use or refer to someone else's work or ideas, including information you find in sources such as books, magazines, newspapers, Web pages, interviews, and e-mails. You need not document when you cite common knowledge--information that your readers can find in any number of general sources (encyclopedias, dictionaries, etc.). If you have come across certain information repeatedly in your research, you may also consider it common knowledge. When you are in doubt, ask someone with expertise or cite the source.

Choosing How to Give Credit

In the note-taking process, you must carefully record information you take from other sources. In order to avoid careless errors, you must decide in which format to take your notes: summarizing, paraphrasing, quoting, or partial quoting.

- Summarizing--condensing information by including only the main ideas and putting them into your own words. A summary is significantly shorter than the original.
- Paraphrasing--putting a passage into your own words without losing any of the ideas. An accurate paraphrase does not mix the words of the original with your own and is roughly the same number of words as the original.
- Quoting--recording the information in the exact words of the original source. When you quote, copy the words and punctuation of the source exactly. Put all quoted material in quotation marks as you are taking the notes.
- Partial Quoting--putting the passage in your own words yet retaining key words and phrases from the original. All words and phrases from the original must be indicated with quotation marks.

Regardless of which format is most appropriate for each note card, you must document all summaries, paraphrases, quotations, and partial quotations by recording the author's last name and page number from the source.

Using Brackets and Ellipsis Marks in Note-Taking

The bracket and ellipsis allow you to change, omit, or add words from a quoted passage so that you can incorporate only the most relevant information and integrate it smoothly into your writing.

[ ] Brackets allow you to insert words of your own into a direct quote. You may use brackets to clarify a word or to keep a sentence grammatically correct. Brackets should be used only when necessary because they can become distracting to the reader.

... Ellipsis Marks allow you to omit words from the original. An ellipsis is three periods with spaces in between. (When you want to omit one or more full sentences, use a period before the three ellipsis marks.) MLA recommends putting brackets around ellipsis marks to clarify that the deletion is yours and not part of the original. Ordinarily, do not use an ellipsis mark at the beginning of a quotation because your reader will assume that the quoted material is taken from a longer passage. For the same reason, do not use an ellipsis mark at the end of a quotation, except when words at the end of the final quoted sentence have been omitted. Be careful that you do not distort or disrupt the meaning of the quoted material when using ellipsis marks.

Note Card Examples

The following excerpt is taken from a book of criticism on Elie Wiesel’s Night. Note how a student has taken information from the excerpt, using summary, paraphrase, and direct quotation.

Fine, Ellen S. “Witness of the Night.” Modern Critical Interpretations: Elie Wiesel’s Night. Ed. Harold Bloom. Philadelphia: Chelsea, 2001. 47.

S — “Elie Wiesel’s first book, Night, published originally in Yiddish in 1956, translated into French in 1958, and into English 1960, depicts the long journey into Holocaust darkness. The work defies all categories. It has been described as personal memoir, autobiographical narrative, fictionalized autobiography, nonfictional novel, and human document. Essentially, it is temoignage, a first-hand account of the concentration camp experience, succinctly related by the

Q — fifteen-year-old narrator, Eliezer. With Kafka-like lucidity, the narrator initiates us, the readers, into the grotesque world of the Holocaust and compels us to

P — observe the event taking place before our eyes.”

PLAGIARISM

You may have heard the word plagiarism used in relation to lawsuits in the recording and publishing industries. The word comes from the Latin word plagiarize meaning kidnapper. Plagiarism is the act of using another person's ideas or expressions in your writing without acknowledging the source. In short, to plagiarize is to give the impression that you have written or thought something that you have in fact borrowed from someone else.

Plagiarism in student writing is often unintentional, as in the case of an elementary school student assigned to do a report on a certain topic, who copies down, word for word, everything on the subject in an encyclopedia. He may even change a few words. Unintentional or not, this is still plagiarism. Unfortunately, some students continue to use such “research methods” in high school and even in college without realizing that these practices constitute plagiarism. You will be using other writers' words and thoughts in your research paper, but you must acknowledge these authors.

Plagiarism often carries severe penalties, ranging from failure of an assignment which may result in failure of a course to expulsion from school.

You are plagiarizing if . . .

1. you do not document your source.

Plagiarism:

- In retelling the story of his childhood, Elie Wiesel depicts the long journey into Holocaust darkness. (no quotation marks or parenthetical documentation)

- In retelling the story of his childhood, Elie Wiesel “depicts the long journey into Holocaust darkness.” (no parenthetical documentation)
1. you do not document your source correctly. (Be sure to cite the author, page number, and information accurately from the original source.)

Plagiarism:

- In retelling the story of his childhood, Elie Wiesel “depicts the long journey into Holocaust darkness” (47). (missing author)
  - In retelling the story of his childhood, Elie Wiesel “depicts the long journey into Holocaust darkness” (Fine 37). (wrong page)
3. you are not accurate in indicating direct quotations.

Plagiarism:

- In retelling the story of his childhood, Elie Wiesel depicts the “long journey into Holocaust darkness” (Fine 47). (wrong placement of quotation marks)
  - In retelling the story of his childhood, Elie Wiesel “depicted a long journey into Holocaust darkness” (Fine 47). (wrong verb tense)
4. you do not completely reword when you paraphrase.

Plagiarism:

- Night is considered a temoignage, a first-hand account of the concentration camp experience, as described by the narrator, Elie Wiesel. (Student uses key words of the passage as his or her own.)

The best way to combat plagiarism is to be vigilant, diligent, and organized in your note-taking. Then you will be less likely to make mistakes.

DOCUMENTING SOURCES USING PARENTHETICAL CITATIONS

Perhaps the most persistent challenge faced in writing the research paper is determining when and how to document sources. The student is obligated to document the words, ideas, and evidence of other writers. The use of parenthetical references enables the researcher to document a source briefly, clearly, and accurately.

The general principle governing parenthetical documentation is that only as much additional information should be given within the parentheses as is necessary to enable the reader to determine the source of the quotation, citation or allusion. Brevity can be accomplished in two ways:

- Use the author's last name in your sentence and place only the page number(s) of the source in parentheses.
- Cite the author's last name and the page number(s) of the source in parentheses.

MODEL PARENTHETICAL CITATIONS:

Primary Sources

1. Novel/Play/Short Story

Salinger reinforces the falling motif as Holden recounts his fear of falling off the curb. "Every time I'd get to the end of a block, I'd make believe I was talking to my brother Allie. I'd say to him, 'Allie, don't let me disappear. Allie, don't let me disappear. Please, Allie'" (198).

NOTE: Include information that will enable readers to find the passage in various editions. That can mean including the part or chapter in which a passage can be found. Melville's narrator describes Captain Ahab as having "an eternal anguish in his face" (90: ch. 28).

2. Poem

Housman's speaker Terrence employs synecdoche when he declares that "malt does more than Milton can / To justify God's ways to man" (21-22).

NOTE: Use the slash (/) to separate lines of poetry you cite in your text. Add a space both before and after the slash.

An example of personification is Tennyson's "broad stream in his banks complaining" (3.120).

NOTE: For a longer poem divided into parts, cite the part and the line numbers, separated by a period.

3. Play

When Brabantio threatens Othello with violence, instead of responding passionately, Othello reasonably replies, “Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them. / Good signoir, you shall command more with years than with your weapons” (1.2.72-75).

NOTE: Cite act, scene, line(s) in Arabic numerals.

Secondary Sources

1. Author(s) Cited in the Lead-in:

Eble observes that “the American dream and the American disillusion come together in The Great Gatsby” (97).

Vanderbilt and Weiss suggest that although Henry Fleming has changed to become an angrier soldier on the second day, he is still basically egocentric (288).

2. Author(s) Not Cited in the Lead-in:

As an illustration of Hemingway’s view of heroism, “The Old Man and the Sea is remarkable for its stress on what men can do” (Gurko 160).

By the end of the novel, Henry “has learned not to control and master it [his fear]” (Vanderbilt and Weiss 292).

3. Three or More Authors:

When a citation is taken from a source written by more than three authors, the use of et al. meaning “and others” eliminates the need to list all other authors after the first.

All Quiet on the Western Front presents a naturalistic view of the grim effects of war on the young recruit (Smith et al. 33-34).

4. Two or More Works by the Same Author:

Orwell’s writing in the 1930’s falls into two categories: documentary and fictional (Williams, Observations 52).

Reflecting on Orwell’s focus, one author notes how deeply moved he was “by what he saw of avoidable or remediable suffering and poverty” (Williams, “Orwell” 15).

NOTE: Shortened versions of titles are acceptable--e.g., Observations or “Orwell.”

PLACING AND PUNCTUATING THE PARENTHETICAL REFERENCE

To avoid unnecessary clutter in sentences, MLA recommends placing the parenthetical reference at the end of the sentence but before the final period. Note that there is no punctuation mark between the author's name and the page citation.

Three other considerations:

1. Placing the Reference within the Sentence

On some occasions placing the reference within the sentence clarifies its relationship to that part of the sentence it documents. In such instances, place the reference at the end of the clause before the necessary punctuation.

For Macbeth “the occasion for temptation is offered by the prophecy of the Weird Sisters” (Brooks 49); he chooses to submit to the world of evil.

2. Using Long Quotations

When you quote more than four typed lines of prose or more than three lines of poetry, set off the quotation by indenting it one inch (or ten spaces) from the left margin. Use the normal right margin and do not single space. Long quotations should be introduced by an informative sentence, usually followed by a colon. Quotation marks are unnecessary because the indented format tells readers that the words are taken directly from the source. Notice that at the end of an indented quotation the parenthetical citation goes outside the final period.

Derek Traversi believes Catherine is destroyed by her emotional conflict involving two men:

The part of her nature which craves civilized, social fulfillment is sufficiently attracted by the agreeable aspects of life in the society of the Lintons to marry Edgar and become part of the family. She herself never refuses the name of “love” to her feeling for Edgar. Yet love [. . .] can satisfy only the superficial part of her nature. All that is most powerful and permanent in her repudiates Linton, impels her to return to Heathcliff.

Catherine is unable to come to terms with her dual attraction . . .

3. Punctuation in Quotation Marks

If a quotation ending with a question mark or an exclamation point concludes your sentence and requires a parenthetical reference, retain the original punctuation within the quotation marks and follow with the reference and the sentence period outside the quotation marks.

In Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein, the doctor wonders, “How can I describe my emotions at this catastrophe, or how delineate the wretch with whom such infinite pains and care I had endeavoured to form?” (42).

Dorthea Brooks responds to her sister, “What a wonderful little almanac you are, Celia!” (7).

TYPING OR WORD PROCESSING THE RESEARCH PAPER

Paper

The paper should be 8 1/2 x 11 unlined white paper used on one side.

Spacing

The paper should be double-spaced, including the title page (if used), the text, and the Works Cited page.

Margins

The standard margins are 1 inch on the left, the right, the top, and the bottom.

Pagination

All pages should be numbered consecutively throughout the paper, including the Works Cited page. The page number appears in the top right corner (1/2 inch from the top). Do not use the abbreviation p. or any other symbol before the page number. On each page, the student's last name should precede the page number.

NOTE: Most word-processing programs accomplish this pagination through a right justified header which includes last name and number icon for consecutive paging.

Paragraph Indentation

Begin each paragraph by indenting five spaces.

Punctuation of Titles

Underline (or italicize) the titles of all works published separately such as books, plays, pamphlets, periodicals, radio and television shows, recordings, etc. Enclose in quotation marks the titles of essays, articles, poems, short stories, interviews, lectures, speeches, song titles, etc.

Heading and Title

A title page is no longer necessary in MLA format although your teacher may still prefer that you use one. In the new format be sure to place your last name and the page number one half-inch down and flush with the right margin (one-inch) on the first page of the text. On the left begin one inch from the top; type your name, your instructor's name, the course name, and the date submitted on separate lines double-spaced. Next, center the title, then double-space, and begin the text of your paper. Do not underline your title; put it in quotation marks, or type it in all capital letters. Use standard capitalization rules for your title. Underline only what you would underline in the text.

Traditional Title Page

Final Presentation

Put the pages in the following order: title page (if required), text, notes (if applicable), Works Cited. Attach papers with one staple in the top left corner.

THE STYLE OF THE WORKS CITED PAGE

1. Do not underline the words Works Cited. Center it and capitalize only the first letter of each word.
2. Number the Works Cited page(s) consecutively with the paper.
3. Do not number the entries.
4. Double space all entries and between the entries.
5. Do not indent the first line of each Works Cited entry, but indent any additional lines by 1/2 inch or five spaces.
6. Include only those sources that are referred to within the text of the paper.
7. Alphabetize the list by authors' last names. If a work has no author or editor, alphabetize by the first word of the title other than a, an, or the.
8. When listing two or more works by an author, do not repeat the author's name; instead, type three hyphens and a period. Skip two spaces and then type the title. List the titles in alphabetical order according to the first important word of each.

APPENDIX

GLOSSARY OF WRITING TERMS

active voice--Stronger writers use active voice, rather than passive voice. A sentence is in the active voice when the subject of the sentence does the action:

The early bird catches the worm. (NOT--The worm is caught by the early bird.)

allusion--A reference to a well-known person, place, thing, or event that the writer assumes the reader will recognize.

Hector rushed in like Superman and rescued the cat from the burning building.

analogy--A comparison of similar objects. An analogy suggests that since the objects are alike in some ways, they will probably be alike in other ways.

Pets are like plants. If you give them lots of care and attention, they will grow to be strong and healthy. If you neglect them, they will become weak and sickly.

anecdote--A short narrative, often of a biographical nature, used to illustrate or make a point; it relates a single episode.

Abe Lincoln walked two miles to return several pennies he had overcharged a customer. (This anecdote shows Lincoln's honesty.)

antecedent--A noun or pronoun to which a pronoun refers:

When the wheel squeaks, it is greased. Wheel is the antecedent of the pronoun it.

antithesis--Antithesis means "exact opposite." In writing, it usually means using opposite ideas in the same thought or sentence.

We decided to have the bear for supper before he "had" us.

argumentation--Writing or speaking that uses reasoning, debate, and logic to make a point in order to convince a reader that a proposition is true or false.

arrangement--The order in which details are placed or organized in a piece of writing.

audience--Those people who read or hear what you have written.

brainstorming--Collecting ideas by thinking freely and openly about all the possibilities, used most often in prewriting.

clause--A word group containing a subject, a verb and any objects, complements, or modifiers of the verb.

An independent clause may stand on its own; a subordinate clause is dependent.

cliche--A trite, overused word or phrase that is no longer a good, effective way of saying something--as in "bright as the sun" or "fresh as a daisy."

clincher--The sentence (usually located last) that summarizes the point being made in a paragraph.

coherence--Putting ideas together in a clear and intelligible way so that the reader can easily follow from one point to the next.

colloquialism--A common word or phrase that is used when people talk to one another. Colloquialisms are usually not accepted as standard usage in a formal speech or in assigned writing.

“How’s it goin’?” / “What’s up?” are colloquialisms for “How are you?”

comma splice--A comma splice results when two independent clauses are connected (spliced) with only a comma. The comma is not enough; a period, semicolon, or a conjunction is needed.

connotation--What a word suggests beyond its basic definition; a word’s overtones of meaning; the emotional coloring suggested by a word. It can be personal, national, cultural, and/or universal.

content--The presence of ideas developed through facts, examples, anecdotes, details, opinions, statistics, reasons, and/or explanations.

conventions--Grammar, mechanics, spelling, usage, and sentence formation.

dangling modifier--Words or phrases that appear to modify the wrong word or a word that isn’t in the sentence.

Trying desperately to get under the fence, Paul’s mother called him.

denotation--The actual, literal, or dictionary definition of a word.

details--The words used to describe a person, persuade an audience, explain a process, or in some way support the main idea. To be effective, details should be vivid, colorful, and appealing.

diction--A writer’s choice of words: slang, colloquial, formal, and so on.

ellipsis--A mark of punctuation, three spaced periods (. . .), indicating that words have been deleted from an otherwise word-for-word quotation.

extended definition--Writing that goes beyond a simple definition of a term. It can cover several paragraphs and include personal definitions and experiences, similes, metaphors, quotations, and so on.

figurative language--Language that goes beyond normal order, construction, or meaning of words by using techniques such as hyperbole, metaphor, personification, or simile to enhance and clarify meaning.

fluency--The ability to express oneself freely and naturally.

focus--The single controlling point made with an awareness of task (mode) about a specific topic.

foreshadowing--Hints or clues that a writer uses to suggest what will happen next in a work.

fragment--A group of words used incorrectly as a sentence because it does not contain all necessary sentence elements and, therefore, does not express a complete thought.

Lettuce all over the tables.

generalization--An idea or statement that emphasizes the general characteristics rather than the specific details of a subject.

hyperbole--An extreme exaggeration or overstatement that a writer uses for emphasis.

My brother exploded when he saw the damage to his car.

idiom--Words used in a special way that may be different from their literal meaning.

Rush-hour traffic moves at a snail's pace.

imagery--Language that appeals to the senses: tactile, olfactory, auditory, visual, gustatory, visceral, organic, kinesthetic.

indefinite pronoun reference--Careless use of a pronoun resulting in the reader's uncertainty of the antecedent.

As he pulled his car up to the service window, it made a strange sound.

irony -- A concept dealing in opposites. Three kinds are 1) verbal (the most common)--the writer says the opposite of what he/she means; 2) dramatic--the audience can see a character's errors, though the character cannot; 3) situational--a disparity exists between the expected outcome and its actual result.

jargon--The technical language of a particular group (musicians, journalists).

Computer jargon: download, interface, RAM, footprint, peripheral, write-protect, and so on.

juxtaposition--Putting two ideas, words, or pictures together to create a contrasting, new, and often ironic meaning. (An ironic statement uses words to mean the opposite of their usual meaning.)

Oh, the joys of winter blizzards!

loaded words--Words that make people feel for or against something. Persuasive writing, such as advertising, often uses loaded words.

This new product is very affordable and easy to use.

Drinking and driving is a deadly combination.

local color--The use of details that are common in a certain place (a local area). A story taking place on a seacoast would probably contain details about the water and the life of people near it.

metaphor--A figure of speech that compares two things without using the word like or as; an implied comparison.

The cup of hot tea was the best medicine for my cold.

metonymy--A figure of speech in which some significant aspect or detail of an experience is used to represent the whole experience; the use of something closely related for the thing actually meant. Writers may speak of the king as “the crown.”

misplaced modifier--Descriptive words, phrases, or clauses that have been placed incorrectly, making the meaning of the sentence unclear.

We have an assortment of combs for physically active people with unbreakable teeth.

objective--Writing that gives factual information without adding feelings or opinions.

organization--The order developed and sustained within and across paragraphs using transitional devices and including an introduction and conclusion. (see Organizational Patterns pp. 4-5)

oxymoron--A technique in which two words with opposite meanings are put together for a special effect.

jumbo shrimp, old news, small fortune, bittersweet

paradox--A statement that is true even though it seems to be saying two opposite, seeming contrary, things.

“The child is father of the man” (Wordsworth).

parallelism--Repeating similar grammatical structures (words, phrases, or sentences) to give writing rhythm and balance.

The doctor took her temperature, checked her heartbeat, and tested her reflexes.

passive voice--A verb is in the passive voice when the subject receives the action.

The worm is caught by the early bird. (See active voice to contrast difference.)

periodic sentence--Sentences generally begin with the subject and predicate; a periodic sentence employs a series of introductory phrases or clauses, then concludes with the subject and predicate.

If you keep your head, if you stay calm, if you anticipate the outcome, then you should succeed.

personification--A figure of speech in which a nonhuman thing (an idea, object, or animal) is given human characteristics.

The low clouds bumped into the mountains.

phrase--A word group that includes a subject or verb, but not both, for then it would be a clause. Most phrases function within sentences as adjectives, as adverbs, or as nouns.

Types of phrases include absolute, appositive, gerund, infinitive, participial, prepositional.

plagiarism--Copying someone else's writing or ideas and then using them as if they were your own. (See page 27.)

point of view--The position or angle from which a story is told.

Types: omniscient, first person, limited observer, double focus prose--Writing or speaking in the usual sentence form. Prose becomes poetry when it takes on rhyme and rhythm.

pun--A phrase that uses words in a way that gives them a funny effect. The words used in a pun often sound the same but have different meanings.

That story about rabbits is a real hare raiser.

redundancy--Unnecessary repetition of an idea or phrase that detracts from a writer's meaningful development.

rhetorical question--A question asked only for effect, used to emphasize a point. No answer is expected.

run-on sentence--A run-on is two (or more) sentences joined without adequate punctuation or a connecting word.

I thought the ride would never end my eyes were crossed, and my fingers were numb.

sarcasm--A form of verbal irony which uses praise to make fun of or "put down" someone or something. The praise is not sincere and is actually intended to mean the opposite thing.

satire--Writing that blends humor and wit with criticism to effect a change in attitude or society. Satire often makes fun of people's habits or ideas to raise questions about a current event or political decision. (See irony and sarcasm.)

simile--A figure of speech that compares two things using the word like or as; a stated comparison.

The dog danced around like loose litter in the wind.

The ice was smooth as glass before the skaters entered the rink.

slang--Informal words or phrases used by particular groups of people when they talk to each other.

chill out    hang loose    totally awesome style--The choice, use, and arrangement of words and sentence structures that create tone and voice. Style is also thought of as the qualities and characteristics that distinguish one writer from another.

subjective--Thinking or writing that includes personal feelings, attitudes, and opinions. (See objective for contrast.)

symbol--A concrete or real object used to represent an idea.

A bird has often been used as a symbol for freedom.

synecdoche--The use of part of something to represent the whole.

“All hands on deck!” (Hands is being used to represent the whole person.)

syntax--The order and relationship of words as they are used together in a sentence.

theme--The central or main idea in a piece of writing; a statement of an author’s attitude about a subject.

thesis statement--A statement that gives the main idea or focus of an essay.

tone--The writer’s attitude toward his or her subject. A writer’s tone can be serious, sarcastic, objective, informal, ironic, etc.

topic--The specific subject of a piece of writing.

topic sentence--The sentence that contains the main idea of a paragraph.

transitions--Words or phrases that connect or tie ideas together.

understatement--The opposite of hyperbole or exaggeration. Something is intentionally represented as less than, in fact, it is.

These hot red peppers may make your mouth tingle a bit.

unity--A sense of oneness in writing in which all sentences work together to develop the main idea.

universal--A topic or an idea that appeals and applies to everyone.

usage--The way in which people use language, usually either standard (formal and informal) or nonstandard. Standard language is required for most of your writing assignments.

voice--How a writer chooses to present himself/herself to a reader. Voice can vary based on purpose (formal, informal, bureaucratic, journalistic, etc.).

writing process--The writing process involves prewriting, writing the first draft, revising, editing, and publishing.

TRANSITIONS CHART

Transitional devices assist the reader in understanding how the writer moves from one idea to another. In choosing a transitional device, ask yourself what relationship the second idea has to the first. Then select a term that expresses that relationship. Consider the logical relationship of ideas as you write.

GLOSSARY OF USAGE

Ø Word and phrases to avoid

1. Ø a lot: A lot is a weak way to describe something because it has little denotation and connotation. What exactly does a lot mean anyway?
2. accept/except: To accept something is to take it or agree to it. Except usually means “other than,” but it can also be a verb that means to exclude or leave out. When I am out walking, I never accept a ride when a car stops beside me except when I know the driver.
3. affect/effect: Affect is almost always a verb meaning to influence or to have an impact upon. Affect as a noun is a psychological term meaning “feeling.” While in her hypnotic trance, Sara displayed little affect, and she responded in monosyllables to the hypnotist’s questions. Effect usually is a noun meaning result or consequence. As a verb, effect means to bring about or to produce a result. Al effected a change in his habits: he quit smoking once he realized that the effects of years of smoking had affected his lung capacity.
4. aggravate/irritate: Aggravate means to worsen; irritate to inflame. Poison ivy irritates the skin. Scratching aggravates the itch.
5. all ready/already: All ready means completely prepared or in readiness; already means previously. The citizens of Miami were all ready for the hurricane to strike, but the storm had already passed to the north, negating their need to worry about the storm’s power.
6. all together/altogether: All together means everyone gathered or in a group; altogether means entirely. The groom’s mother was not altogether convinced that family members would travel that far to the wedding so that they could be all together for the special occasion.
7. Ø alright: There is no such word. The word is all right. “All right, I’ll postpone your vocabulary quiz,” announced Mr. Smith.
8. altar/alter: Altar refers to a table or stand used for religious purposes; alter means to change. The altar cloth in the Cathedral was altered to reflect the mood and tone of each holiday.
9. allude/refer: Allude means to mention indirectly or to hint at; refer means to mention something definitely. Cyrus suspected that his parents’ discussion of ungrateful children alluded to his lack of appreciation for his birthday gifts, but his parents never referred to his specific behaviors when they talked.

10. alumnus (alumni)/alumna (alumnae): Alumnus refers to a male graduate (plural is alumni); a female graduate is an alumna (plural is alumnae); male and female graduates are collectively called alumni. Michelle is an alumna and Randy is an alumnus of the class of '93, and as alumni of USC, they and their classmates will meet over the years at high school reunions.
11. allusion/illusion/delusion: An allusion is an indirect mention or reference: Jim's allusion to Machiavelli when discussing his new CEO's business tactics indicated that he thinks the new boss is ruthless. An illusion is a false impression, while delusion has a strong meaning, implying deception, being misled, or deceived. The dim lighting in the out-of-the-way restaurant created an illusion of intrigue. The man chose to wear a disguise because of his delusion that the FBI was hunting him.
12. among/between/amid: Use among to refer to three or more persons or things. I divided the candy among the three costumed children who yelled, "Trick or treat!" Use between to refer to two. I couldn't detect any significant differences between two vans in the showroom. Use amid when referring to a quantity of something not thought of as individual items: Steve found his car keys amid the paper work on his desk.
13. amount/number: Amount refers to a quantity thought of as a unit in which individual items can not be counted (rain, money); use with a singular word. Number refers to a quantity thought of as several things which can be individually counted (pencils, cars); use with a plural word. An unusually large number of students were absent because of the flu, but the amount of instructional time lost by each pupil was only one or two days.
14. Ø and etc.: Etc. is the abbreviation for et cetera, meaning "and other things," so and etc. is redundant. Use only etc.
15. anxious/eager: These are often interchanged when speaking, but in writing, use eager (followed by to) when looking forward to something, and use anxious (followed by about or for) when there is actually an element of worry or anxiety involved. Sally was eager to try white water rafting, but her mother was anxious about the potential danger of the excursion.
16. appraise/apprise: Appraise means to evaluate or to size up; apprise means to inform. Because Pindarus inaccurately appraises the events on the battlefield in Act V of Julius Caesar, he incorrectly apprises Cassius that Titinius is captured.
17. apt/liable/likely: Apt means, suitable, appropriate, skilled. Liabile means legally bound and also means exposed to risk or misfortune; undesirable consequences. Likely means possible, probable, or expected. Andy is likely to become a star player because he is an apt pupil at hockey camp. However, if Andy continues to play hockey, he is liable to lose a few teeth!

18. arbitrate/mediate: To arbitrate is to listen to the evidence of both sides in a dispute in order to make a binding decision. To mediate is to act as peacemaker; no settlement can be imposed. The Secretary of Labor was asked to arbitrate the UPS strike in order to end it. When he was asked to mediate the cease-fire talks, the UN negotiator hoped to cool the tempers of the warring factions.
19. Ø as: Do not use as as a substitute for because or since. As means during. Mrs. Frey did not see her son Alan as [during the time] the football team rushed out on to the field. Liz can't go with us to the mall because [not as] she has yearbook after school.
20. as/like: As is used as a conjunction and is followed by a verb. No verb follows the preposition like. Scout ran quickly by the Radley house, as did all the other children in town. Fearing Boo, they ran like frightened rabbits. In casual usage, like is gaining popularity: *She tells it like [instead of as] it is. Like is also replacing as though and as if to introduce clauses: *Ryan eats pizza like [instead of as though] it is going out of style.* These constructions are not acceptable in formal speaking or writing.*
21. Ø as to whether: Whether is enough.
22. ascent/assent: Ascent means a rise or climb; as a noun, assent means consent or agreement. As a verb, it means to express an acceptance of an opinion, proposal, etc. My friends assented to my suggestion to go to the Science Center to see the OMNIMAX movie that deals with a dangerous and deadly ascent up Mt. Everest.
23. assume/presume: Assume means to suppose or to take for granted. Presume means to believe, to dare, or to take too much for granted. I assume you just weren't thinking when you presumed to borrow my gym clothes from my locker without asking.
24. assure/ensure/insure: All three words have the core meaning “to make certain.” Assure works best when it refers to a person, meaning to give confidence to. Insure is best to use when the idea is prevention. Ensure (usually followed by that) means to make certain, to guarantee, to protect. I assure you that this policy for mine subsidence insures you against any shifts in your house's foundation, ensuring that the value of your home will be protected.
25. avert/avoid: Avert means to prevent or turn away. Avoid means to stay clear of. Theresa was able to avoid the large pothole in the middle of McMurray Road, averting damage to the family's new car.
26. Ø awful/awfully: Awful is only proper when meaning full of awe or inspiring awe. Awfully means in a way to inspire awe. The use of either one to mean terrible or bad is incorrect, as is their use to mean very. Justin was very [not awfully] upset last night when his computer crashed and he lost his paper.

27. bad/badly: Use bad an adjective, to modify a noun (bad day), or after a linking verb to describe a condition or passive state, especially feel or look. Use badly, an adverb, to describe an activity. I feel bad and look bad after I run the pool steps for conditioning because my body reacts badly to that activity.
28. Ø being: Not appropriate after regard as: David is regarded as the best math student in the high school.
29. Ø being that: Especially when writing, do not substitute being that for since or because. Because [not being that] he was tired, Tom went to bed early. Also avoid being as, being as how, seeing that, seeing as, and seeing as how.
30. beside/besides: Beside means next to or at the side of; besides means except or in addition to. It can also mean moreover. I'll stand beside her while she waits in line, but no one besides Terri can have ice cream because the rest of us are lactose intolerant! Besides, even if we could eat them, we didn't bring money for cones.
31. born/borne: Born means brought into life or being; borne means carried or endured. The idea for the revolutionary new TV was born in the laboratories of Motorola, and the burden of keeping the new product secret was borne professionally by the scientists, engineers, and technicians who designed and produced it.
32. brake/break: Brake refers to a device for slowing or stopping motion; break means to shatter or come apart. After observing his son, Jake's father told him that he had to break the habit of riding the brake when he was driving the family car downhill.
33. bring/take: Bring indicates the motion of an object toward a speaker; take indicates the motion of an object away from a speaker. It's thoughtful of you to offer to bring lasagna to the party, but please remember to take your dish when you go home because I always have difficulty returning the right serving dish to the right person!
34. Ø can't hardly: Can't hardly is a double negative which is incorrect; use can hardly. Lauren can hardly contain her excitement now that she's learned she is a National Merit Finalist.
35. cancel/censure: To cancel is to examine something with the intent of removing objectionable material. Parents are told to cancel the movies their children watch as well as the music they listen to. To censure means to assign blame or to criticize, especially in a public setting. The Senate committee censured Senator William's aide who withheld sensitive documents from those who were investigating allegations against the newly elected lawmaker.

36. cite/sight/site: Cite means to quote as proof or as an authority, to refer to; sight means a view; site means a place. The principal cited the construction company's time table when he answered queries about the condition of the site of the new high school, a sight which seemed, at the moment, to be nothing more than a huge hole in the ground.
37. climatic/climactic: Climatic refers to weather, climactic [act as in a play] to the climax of an event. The climatic disruptions caused by El Nino were profound. The climactic moment of his high school career occurred when Jeremy received his diploma.
38. coarse/course: Coarse means rough in texture or crude and unrefined; course is a path, a unit of study, a playing field, or part of a meal. The course in etiquette will help teenagers to refine their coarse language and behavior.
39. coincidence/irony: Coincidence refers to the chance occurrence of two events happening at the same time. It was a coincidence that both Rita and Judy applied for the same after-school job at King's. Irony refers to a situation that contains an element of incongruity or contradiction when the opposite happens from what one expects or intends. Both Rita and Judy swore off ice cream, so it was ironic that they saw each other at Baskin-Robbins. Irony does not mean merely coincidental or surprising as in the following sentence: Ironically [surprisingly], Mt. Lebanon's team also lost last year's championship game to USC by one point.
40. compare with/compare to: Compare with, the more common, means to examine or analyze for similarities and/or differences. If readers compare Benvolio with Mercutio, they will note how each is presented and functions in Shakespeare's play. Compared to is used simply to show or to point out a resemblance. Romeo compares Juliet to the sun.
41. complement/compliment: To complement is to complete, to bring to perfection, to make a whole. A complement is something that completes or makes whole. Those red shoes are a great complement to Barbara's outfit. To compliment means to praise or admire, and a compliment [remember "i" for "nice"] is such an expression of praise. Barbara appreciated the compliments she received when she wore her new red shoes.
42. confer/conference: Confer is the verb, to meet for discussion: Jill conferred several times with her English teacher during the writing of her research paper. Conference is the noun, the meeting: Student-teacher conferences are often held in the Resource Center.
43. conscience/conscious: To be conscious is to be aware or alert; conscience is one's sense of moral principles. If Madeline had understood the saying "Let your conscience be your guide," she would have been conscious that lying to her grandmother was unacceptable.

44. continual/continuous: Continual means frequently recurring, happening over and over, stopping and starting in quick succession; continuous means uninterrupted in space or time, and implies continuity. The continual booming of the thunder agitated the dog whose continuous barking kept the neighbors awake all night.
45. convince/persuade: A person is convinced of something: a person is persuaded to do something. Convince should be followed by of or that. Her friends convinced Mary Lou that she would enjoy playing in the marching band, so she was persuaded to join the activity.
46. Ø could of/should of/would of: Could of is nonstandard for could have; should of is nonstandard for should have, would of is nonstandard for would have. Vince could have gotten into Northwestern, but he waited too long to apply.
47. councilor/counselor: A councilor is a member of a council, a group meeting to conference, etc. A counselor is one who gives advice or counsels. A councilor on the township board introduced a motion to invite a drug and alcohol counselor to the next meeting to discuss teenage addictions.
48. credibility/credulity: Credibility means being believable, trustworthy. Other forms of the word are credible (believable) and incredible (unbelievable). Credulity is the quality of being too trusting, gullible. Credulous means gullible, and incredulous means skeptical. The credibility of the con man’s references enabled him to swindle the investors who should have been more incredulous when he proposed his “get rich quick” scheme to them.
49. credible/creditable: Creditable, not credible, means praiseworthy. In his remarks in the PTSO newsletter, the principal commented on the junior’s creditable performance on the SAT.
50. decimate: literally, “to slaughter every tenth part.” It means to destroy or kill a large part. It does not mean to destroy entirely. The corn crop was decimated by the drought, so our farm profits will shrink accordingly.
51. desert/dessert: Desert can be a noun which means a dry, barren land. It is also a verb meaning to leave or abandon. Dessert is the last course of a meal. In a hot desert, guests probably would not desert the dinner table if they had the opportunity to enjoy a refreshing fruit cup for dessert.
52. diagnose: The disease is diagnosed, not the patient: John’s rash was diagnosed as measles. Not: John was diagnosed with measles.

53. different from/different than: Different from is always correct; different than is not. (Using logic, one thing differs from another.) My schedule is different from Joe's. Either can be placed before a clause (a statement containing a subject and a verb): Student dress is different from what [or different than] it was ten years ago. However, different than is more common in the above example which introduces a clause of comparison.
54. disinterested/uninterested: Disinterested means impartial or neutral; uninterested means bored or lacking interest. A dispute should be settled by an arbitrator, a disinterested party. Because Linda was uninterested in the movie discussion of her friends, she left them in the Commons and headed for the Resource Center.
55. divided into/composed of: Divided into emphasizes parts of something, while composed of emphasizes the make-up or form of something. A pie is divided into slices. A pie is composed of crust and filling.
56. e.g./i.e.: E.g., short for the Latin exempli gratia, means for example. Huck and Jim have much in common, e.g., they are outcasts from society, and they are runaways. I.e. from the Latin id est, means that is. Huck and Jim have one very obvious difference, i.e., their race. Commas come before and after e.g. and i.e. in a sentence.
57. emigrate/immigrate: One emigrates from one country and immigrates to another. Remember the trick: an emigrant exits, and an immigrant comes in. My grandparents emigrated from Eastern Europe and immigrated to the United States.
58. eminent/imminent: Eminent means famous or superior. Imminent means impending or about to happen. The eminent lawyer felt that freedom was imminent for his client once the jury heard the circumstantial and contradictory evidence.
59. enervating: draining one of energy. It does not mean energizing. Working in the hot sun is enervating.
60. enormity: great wickedness; a monstrous or outrageous act. Do not confuse with enormousness. The public is shocked by the enormity of crimes against children.
61. enormity/enormousness: Enormity means a great wickedness, something that is monstrous or appalling; enormousness refers to great size, physical or figurative. To prosecute the enormity or the crimes against humanity carried out in Bosnia and Rwanda, the UN worked tirelessly to collect evidence, a monumental task indicated by the enormousness of the interviews of witnesses and the forensic reports.
62. Ø enthuse: This verb, from the noun enthusiasm, is not accepted in formal writing or speaking.

63. farther/further: Use farther when discussing physical distance, and use further to discuss abstract ideas, or to indicate a greater extent or degree. John knew he could run farther than his older brother. Once Mr. Nelson informed his son that he would have an eleven o'clock curfew, Mr. Nelson refused to discuss the issue further.
64. fewer/less: Use fewer to mean a smaller number of individual things; use less to mean a smaller quantity of something or a single amount. Patti spent less time on the phone this week because she had fewer calls to make.
65. flammable/inflammable/nonflammable: Flammable and inflammable mean the same thing: combustible. Do not use inflammable to mean fireproof. Something fireproof is nonflammable. The inventory stored in the warehouse must have been highly inflammable [or flammable] because nonflammable materials would not have burned so quickly and spread so rapidly.
66. flounder/founder: Flounder means to struggle awkwardly to move, to stumble awkwardly in speech or actions; founder means to get stuck, fail completely, or sink like a ship. Connie floundered through the maze of IRS regulations and laws when she tried to complete her income tax form for her bankrupt business which had foundered in the poor economic climate.
67. forbid: Use forbid with to, never with from. I forbid you to wear a hat in class. Or, use forbid alone with an “-ing” word. I forbid wearing hats in class.
68. formally/formerly: Formally means ceremoniously; formerly means in times past. The bride's mother and I were introduced formally when I passed through the receiving line outside the church, but we had met formerly at the bride's shower the month before.
69. fortuitous/fortunate: Fortuitous means happening by chance, and usually implies a good or successful outcome; fortunate means lucky. It was fortuitous that I ran into Ron at the mall since we hadn't seen each other for years. He told me his company was hiring, and now I am a fortunate member of the successful computer company's sales team!
70. good/well: Good is an adjective; well is an adverb meaning capably done or performed. *Pam, a good softball player, performs well for her team. Well can be an adjective to describe 1) the state of one's health and 2) something that is satisfactory. *I didn't feel well when I first came to the beach, but all is well now.
71. Ø had ought/hadn't ought: Do not use had or hadn't with ought. Drivers ought to secure their seat belts before they start their cars.

72. hanged/hung: Hanged only refers to executions or suicide; otherwise, hung is the past tense of to hang meaning to fasten or suspend. It is also the correct word for phrases such as hung out, hung up, etc. In England, many executions were announced on posters that were hung throughout London to inform citizens when prisoners would be hanged in public at the gallows.
73. healthful/healthy/wholesome: Healthful means health-giving, such as a climate. Healthy means in good health. Wholesome means producing a good effect. The healthy octogenarian attributed his good physical condition to a wholesome diet which included only healthful foods and vitamins.
74. hopefully: In a hopeful manner or with hope, “Nephew, I’m thinking of making you my heir,” declared Mr. Casey. “Soon?” John asked hopefully. Hopefully, should not be used to replace “it is hoped” or “I hope.” However, hopefully seems to be joining the category of introductory words (honestly, frankly, seriously, etc.) that are used not to describe a verb, but to describe the speaker’s attitude toward the statement that follows. (Hopefully, I will play on the varsity basketball team.) Try to avoid this construction.
75. in/into/in to: In suggests location within a place; into is used for entering something (a room, a profession), for changing the form of something, or for making contact; otherwise, use in to. If the in can be eliminated without changing the meaning, the term you want is in to. I’ll stay in the living room until the guests arrive. When they do come into the house, bring them in to me and then we’ll go in to dinner together. Avoid in as dangling preposition.
76. infer/imply: Infer is the act of the reader or listener receiving a communication and means to draw a conclusion; imply is the act of the writer or speaker making the communication and means to hint, or to suggest or state indirectly. Sam used computer jargon during his interview, implying that he knew programming well, but when he could not answer the interviewer’s specific questions, the personnel director inferred that Sam was actually inexperienced in the field.
77. ingenious/ingenuous: Ingenious means clever or brilliant; ingenuous means candid, frank, innocently open and trusting. Someone who is disingenuous is one who is insincere or lies. Ingenuous Rosemarie explained her ingenious invention to the ruthless man who then took her idea and patented it himself.*
78. Ø irregardless: This construction is considered substandard. Do not use it as a substitute for regardless.
79. Ø is when/is where: These constructions are used incorrectly in definitions. Do not use when or where as a substitute for the noun in the definition. Hubris is excessive pride, a trait of a tragic hero (not hubris is when a character has excessive pride).

80. it's/its: It's is a contraction of it is or it has. Its is the possessive form of it. It's too early to tell what caused the plane crash, but its consequences will affect many lives.
81. kudos: Kudos is a singular noun, not a plural form, meaning praise or glory. Lorraine deserves kudos for her work on the yearbook. There is no word kudo.
82. lay/lie: To lay means to put or place something; to lie means to rest or recline. I need to lay my coat down in the den and lie down immediately because I am getting a migraine. The problem occurs with the other tenses of these verbs: Yesterday, Sandy laid her materials aside and lay down. In the past, Sandy has laid reading materials aside and has lain down.
83. lead/led: Lead refers to a metal; led is the past tense of the verb to lead. Mr. Harvey led the confused student through the solution to the math problem by writing out and explaining the calculations, but he ran out of lead in his mechanical pencil and had to borrow another one to finish the computations.
84. literally: actually; to the letter. This word is often confused with figuratively. To say John was literally dead from working too hard means that he was, in fact, deceased. Do not use literally in support of an exaggeration. Rather, use literally sparingly when you want to emphasize a point. Kathy was astonished to discover that some of her classmates literally did not know the names of the five Great Lakes.
85. loath/loathe: Loath, usually followed by to, means unwilling or reluctant (to); loathe is a verb meaning to dislike intensely. Natalie was loath to touch the dragonfly because she loathed insects.
86. loose/lose: Loose means free, not tight or firm; lose means to suffer a loss or to misplace. Marty's mother kept warning him that he would lose the puppy if the Collie's collar was loose when he was tied outside.
87. medal/meddle/mettle: A medal is a piece of metal with insignias, etc. to commemorate some event or to award someone for distinguished merit; meddle means to interfere or to tamper; mettle refers to a high quality of character, spirit, or courage. Saving Private Ryan is a movie that reminds Americans that many soldiers in World War II displayed their mettle during combat, even though most received no special recognition or medals, and even though some believed it was not the role or our country to meddle in the affairs of Europe.
88. miner/minor: A miner works in a mine; a minor refers to underage or something smaller or less important (the opposite of major). The twelve year old boy could not be hired to be a miner because he was a minor.

89. myself: Myself is not a substitute for I or me. Rebecca and I [not myself] were chosen as Pantherettes. The other “-self” words (himself, itself, ourselves, etc.) and myself are used for two purposes. One is emphasis: I solved the calculus problem myself. The judge himself was guilty of fraud. The other purpose is to refer back to the subject. Rob and Tony consider themselves lucky to be on the lacrosse team. You call yourself a friend, but you didn’t call me back!
90. nauseated/nauseous: Nauseated means sick, while nauseous means sickening. The students in the chemistry lab became nauseated by the nauseous fumes that were accidentally released during the experiment.
91. Ø off/off of: Do not use off or off of in place of from. If you forget my locker number, you can get it from [not off of] Drew.
92. off of: Of is unnecessary with off. The field hockey team ran off [not off of] the field cheering wildly to celebrate the victory.
93. only: alone, and no other, solely. Only is usually placed before the word or phrase to be singled out; however, its placement is best where it sounds most natural and most accurate. Notice how the meanings of the following sentences change, based on the placement of the word only: Only the referee says he saw the foul on the field. The referee only says he saw the foul on the field. The referee says he saw only the foul on the field. The referee says only he saw the foul on the field. Be clear. Also, do not use only in place of but or except: I would have gone to the Penguins’ game, except [not only] I had to study for a Spanish test.
93. Ø orientate: The extra syllable is unnecessary. Use orient. As a freshman, Jason had to orient himself to Penn State’s large campus.
94. passed/past: Passed is the past tense of to pass; past means belonging to a former time, or beyond a time or place. While touring the Gettysburg battlefield, we passed the dedicated men and women involved in recreating the past through their Civil War reenactments
96. possessive pronouns with “-ing” nouns (gerunds): The pronoun modifying a noun has to be in the possessive form (my, his, her, your, etc.) Sam resents my success in calculus. If the noun is a gerund, an -ing verb acting as a noun, the same rule applies. Sam resents my going to a math tutor for help in calculus. He thinks my studying that way is an unfair advantage.
97. presently: soon, before long, shortly. Presently does not mean now or at present. I will take the garbage out presently, when the baseball game on TV is interrupted by a commercial.
98. Ø preventative: The extra syllable is unnecessary. Use preventive. As a preventive measure, consider getting a flu shot in the fall.

99. principal/principle: Principal means the head of a school, the most important, or a sum of money; a principle is a rule of conduct or a basic truth. The revolutionary principles set forth in “The Declaration of Independence” are the principal reasons England categorized the colonists as traitors to the monarchy.
100. quotation/quote: Quote is the verb; quotation is the noun. Avoid using the word quote as an abbreviated form of quotation. A critical paper is more impressive if the author quotes passages from the primary source, but the quotations (not quotes) must be appropriate and must be the most effective available to prove a point.
101. raise/rise: To raise means to bring or lift something up. To rise means to go up. When students and teachers rise to recite “The Pledge of Allegiance,” they also raise their right hands to their hearts. I like to raise my window blind in the morning in order to watch the sun as it rises in the east.
102. Ø reason is because: Use one or the other, not both. Because means “for the reason that,” so this phrase is redundant. The reason Nick stayed home is that he had pink eye. Nick stayed home because he had pink eye.
103. regretfully/regrettably: One who is full of regret is regretful. That which causes the regret is regrettable. Matt regretfully turned in his research paper late because he regrettably avoided writing it until the last minute.
104. respectfully/respectively: Respectfully is used to describe an action that is courteous and deferential. Respectively means each in the order given. Chris respectfully submitted his resignation three weeks early so that his manager and immediate boss, Mr. Green and Mr. Ross respectively, would have enough time to find a replacement before he went back to college.
105. restive: unruly, hard to control, stubborn. It does not mean impatient or fidgety, the meaning of restless. The Doberman was restive in the veterinarian’s office, so its owner had to take him outside, away from the other dogs.
106. roul/route: Roul means a disorderly flight or an overwhelming defeat. As a verb, it means to put to flight or to defeat overwhelmingly; route means a road or a way to go. The final basketball score, 120-65, reflected a disappointing roul for the Cinderella Team whose route to the playoffs had been remarkable.
107. simple/simplistic: Simple describes something easy, uncomplicated, or unaffected. Simplistic describes something that is so simplified it is no longer useful. The information I received in the computer course was too simplistic: making sense of the program was impossible once I was at home, so the program was not simple after all.

108. stationary/stationery: Stationary means not moving or fixed in one position; stationery is paper. I tried to write my letter to Robin outside on my deck, but the gusty wind prevented my stationery from remaining stationary on the picnic table.
109. than/then: Use than to compare and contrast things. If one thing follows or is the result of another, use then. After going out on the rough seas in the charter boat, Kathy was sicker than she had ever been. Another passenger gave her a bromine tablet. Then she felt better. The word than can be followed by the pronouns I/me, he/him, she/her, or they/them. Consider the meaning of the sentence: Ted loves Mexican food more than I [more than I do]. Ted loves Mexican food more than me [more than he loves me]. Often, adding the unfinished thought makes it easier to choose the correct pronoun.
110. their/there/they're: Their is the possessive of they, there means the opposite of here, and they're is the contraction for they are. Paul and Shelley are going to give us their full cooperation at the hearing. Once they get there, they're going to testify at the courthouse for the prosecution.
111. this (that) kind/these (those) kinds: This (that) is singular and is used with kind of, sort of, type of, and style of. It is followed by a singular noun. These (those) is plural and is used with kinds of, sorts of, types of, and styles of. It is usually followed by a plural noun. I know these kinds of movies are popular, because audiences like action and thrills, but this kind of story becomes too predictable after a while.
112. to/too/two: To, as a preposition, indicates direction, degree, connection, etc. To is also part of the infinitive form of a verb; too means more than enough or also; two is the number. Rowena wants to go to the movies too, but there are too many of us who want to go, so we'll take two cars.
113. Ø toward/towards: Toward and towards are generally interchangeable, although toward is preferred. Similarly, do not add an -s to forward, backward, upward, downward, onward, etc.
114. try and/try to: The proper phrase is try to. Try to finish your test without rushing.* Try and is gaining acceptance when an added note of defiance or resolve is expressed: The bully taunted, "try and make me!"
115. unique: without equal, unrivaled, one of a kind. There are no degrees of uniqueness: nothing can be more, quite, or particularly unique. The word stands alone. Jarred's handwriting is unique [not quite unique].
116. via: by way of. Via does not mean by means of. Sanjay drove to Pittsburgh via Mt. Lebanon. Not: Sanjay drove to Pittsburgh via car.

117. waist/waste: Waist is the middle part of the body; waste means useless spending, unused or useless material. As a verb, it has many meanings, including to spend uselessly, to devastate or ruin, to lose strength, and to fail to take proper advantage of (to waste an opportunity). It was a waste of time to buy the jeans, because the waist was too big to be altered in an acceptable fashion.
118. weather/whether: Weather refers to atmospheric conditions; whether refers to a choice between alternatives. I don't know whether Lance's flight has been delayed or whether it will arrive on time because the weather in Philadelphia is unsettled.
119. when/whenever: When means at or during the time that. Whenever means every time or on every occurrence. Whenever I need advice [every time] while I am cooking, I call my mother. Sometimes I can't reach her on the phone when [at that time] I need her.*
120. which/that/who: Which is used to refer to things only; that can refer to things, animals, or categories of people; who refers to people only. Alarm clocks that glow in the dark are good for people who travel because wake-up calls, which are placed with the desk, are not always reliable. Use that to introduce a clause whose presence is essential to the meaning of the main sentence. This clause is not set off by commas. Use which to introduce a clause whose presence introduces information that is important but not necessarily essential to the meaning of the main sentence. This clause is separated from the rest of the sentence with commas. The assembly that Claudia attended mods 15-16 on Wednesday honored the athletes participating in fall sports. The assembly, which honored athletes in fall sports, lasted longer than expected, so Claudia almost missed her bus.
121. who's/whose: Who's is the contraction for "who is" or "who has"; whose is the possessive of who. Mr. Reynolds asked his class, "Whose paper is this? Since there's no name on it, who's going to get the 'A' recorded in the grade book?!"
122. Ø you: Avoid using you in an indefinite sense when there is no clear antecedent or when the meaning is "anyone." Any observer [not you] could tell that Roger received a high score on his biology test because of the wide grin on his face. In some SAT reading samples, the sentence structures are convoluted [not you find convoluted sentence structures].*
123. your/you're: Your is the possessive for you; you're means "you are." Mrs. Carpenter informed Rachel, "You're the student from our homeroom who's been chosen to go to the principal's breakfast, so take your books with you because the morning meeting will last into mod 1."

“ . . . the first task of revision is vision. The writer must stand back from the work the way any craftsman does to see what has been done.”
--Donald Murray
